EURASIAN JOURNAL OF PULMONOLOGY

FORMERLY SOLUNUM

Editorial

Dear Colleagues,

The 2nd issue of the Eurasian Journal of Pulmonology in 2014 comes with 3 reviews, 7 research articles and interesting case reports. The first review is an article titled “Scanning of Lung Cancer through Low-Dose Computed Tomography Technique”, written by James Jett, who is a researcher that is well-known to all of you, from the United States of America. We hope that you will take this article admiringly. Two other reviews concerning individual, community and social marketing approaches in tobacco control, and experimental models of acute lung injury have been written by Nazmi Bilir and Emine Yılmaz Sipahi, respectively. We hope that you will read these two reviews and the other research articles on various subjects with great interest.

This issue also includes the presentation of quizzes and radiological case reports aimed at postgraduate education, which we have started to published with the previous issue.

It is very pleasing for us to see that both the journal’s scope and its quality are progressing with every new issue, especially in these days when we are working on getting the final issue of 2014 ready. Every new issue of our journal is becoming more comprehensive and more qualified, which is greatly satisfying for us. I would like to thank once more to our honourable authors, readers, and all of the scientists who are the main source of our progress for their valuable contributions to the journal.
