

Dear Colleagues,

In the second issue of the eighth year of our journal, we once again tried to offer a rich content on a variety of areas of psychiatric nursing. In this issue, we are glad to offer the readers seven studies which are An evaluation of an anger management training that is enriched by psychodrama; An examination of the self-representations of the young individuals that have parents with bipolar disorder; The effect of self-care power and satisfaction with life degrees in elderly on their hope levels; The ethical problems experienced by the nurses that work in the psychiatry clinics in Turkey; The correlations between nursing students' self-compassion and multi-dimensional perfectionism levels, and the influential factors; The perception of work environment and psychological distress in the nurses that work in intensive care units, and influential factors; and The validity and reliability study of the Turkish form of Suicide Stigmatization Among University Students Scale.<sup>7</sup> The issue also includes a letter from the editor, and two literature reviews: The factors and psychological problems that lead children to crime; and Nursing care, psychological resilience in nurses, and influential factors.

We look forward to receiving your new studies, and will be glad to have your contributions, opinions and suggestions.

Best wishes and best regards,

Associate Professor Nurhan Eren
